

8

Travel PRODUCTS FOR THE REST OF US

In August, we featured 10 "Gadgets on the Go." One of those gadgets was a tiny scanner that could hold 100 pages of information. The following products have nothing to do with that sort of thing. By Paul Denton Comfort and efficiency should be a big part of any journey.

For its workhorse of local connections, a sock glove is indispensable, an umbrella with a built-in flashlight is a must-have travel aid and the combination utility water-resistant summer sunscreen something that doesn't catch... and may well be the one you'll have back without delay. If you're confused by the mind-boggling array of travel accessories out there... the world is really really small... maybe. We decided to see how to save the thousands of possibilities for an energy-efficient travel. The most useful travel products today are those that solve the most common travel problems across the most use-cases. What accessories do you do your travel bag for the journey from your gear? It's a great idea. What are you using to power up your devices? A lot of packing items are a pleasant surprise too.

TRAVEL PRODUCTS FOR THE REST OF US

7 Zip-It Socks

Zip-It Travel Socks are what you might call a double-threat. They have a zippered pocket that allows you to hide money, etc., for the sake of safety. (Hey, just because you're paranoid about theft doesn't mean they're not out to get your stuff.) And moisture-wicking eliminates the need to buy more socks on the road: McClelland says when you run out of clean ones, you can wash these in the sink, hang them overnight, and they're dry well before morning. These calf-length socks made of Comfortrel XP fabric are also great for health-conscious travelers who may want to get a jog or two in while on the road but don't know what to do with the hotel key. $23.99; www.zipitsox.com

8 Listerine PocketPaks

Just in case you're a germaphobe, a small pack of Listerine PocketPaks is a handy travel accessory. The quality of the breath-freshening power of a PocketPak Listerine is the same as the full-size bottle. It's a great travel accessory to pack in your bag, providing a quick, low-key, effective way to freshen your breath and your clothes. It's a convenient way to keep your breath fresh and your clothes smelling like you. listersine.com

SOLUTION

7

Zip-It Socks

Zip-It Travel Socks are what you might call a double-threat. They have a zippered pocket that allows you to hide money, etc., for the sake of safety. (Hey, just because you're paranoid about theft doesn't mean they're not out to get your stuff.) And moisture-wicking eliminates the need to buy more socks on the road: McClelland says when you run out of clean ones, you can wash these in the sink, hang them overnight, and they're dry well before morning. These calf-length socks made of Comfortrel XP fabric are also great for health-conscious travelers who may want to get a jog or two in while on the road but don't know what to do with the hotel key. $23.99; www.zipitsox.com